N.C. League of Municipalities Taps Jennifer Schneier as General Counsel

(RALEIGH) – The North Carolina League of Municipalities (NCLM) today announced that Jennifer Schneier will serve as its new General Counsel. Schneier, a licensed attorney, has served as NCLM’s Interim General Counsel since January 2020.

“Jennifer is well-respected among North Carolina municipal elected and appointed officials and is a great fit to serve cities and towns statewide,” said NCLM Executive Director Paul Meyer. “She brings a strong understanding of how cities and towns operate and the policy and legal issues they deal with day in and day out. We are thrilled that she will continue serving municipal government in North Carolina in her new role at the League.”

Schneier previously served as Senior Assistant General Counsel at NCLM. Prior to her time at NCLM, she served as an Assistant City Attorney in Greensboro, and in private practice with a firm involved with real estate investing and land use. Schneier earned her law degree from the University of San Diego School of Law where she was a member of the San Diego Law Review. Prior to her venture into the legal profession, she worked for a major pharmaceutical company where she was a regional account manager for drug and grocery chains. Schneier also holds a bachelor’s degree from Duke University.

“I am honored to serve as the General Counsel for NCLM,” Schneier said. “I look forward to making a positive difference in helping the League continue its mission of supporting municipalities across the state.”
